Devanagari, (Sanskrit: deva, “god,” and nagari (lipi), “[script] of the city”) also called Nagari, script used to write the Sanskrit, Prakrit, Hindi, Marathi, and Nepali languages, developed from the North Indian monumental script known as Gupta and ultimately from the Brahm alphabet, from which all modern Indian writing systems are derived. In use from the 7th century CE and occurring in its mature form from the 11th century onward, Devanagari is characterized by long, horizontal strokes at the tops of the letters, usually joined in modern usage to form a...
